

The International Congress of Doctoral Students will take place on June 26 and 27, 2025 and will be held online, facilitating participation from anywhere through Google Meet.

The International PhD Conference is an initiative that seeks to foster meetings, exchange of ideas and collaboration between PhD students, regardless of their field of research.

The conference offers an interdisciplinary space to connect with other researchers and explore new opportunities for collaboration and learning.

Who can participate?

The conference is open to any PhD student from any university. Attendance is free of charge.

How to submit your contribution?

1. Prepare your abstract. Include title, authors, affiliation, and a brief description of your research.
2. Choose the format. You can submit your oral communication in pre-recorded video format (maximum 5 minutes) or present it live via Google Meet on the day of the conference.

The Congress also fulfils the "third mission" since through its activities this event disseminates knowledge by transferring research results outside the academic field, making such results accessible and useful for society, companies and institutions. Likewise, the congress promotes innovation by strengthening the link between the university and society, contributing to the cultural, social and economic development of the territory.

DEADLINE

Oral presentations: please submit your abstract before April 24, 2025.

A certificate of participation will be awarded only if you have formalized your registration.

REGISTRATION

Once you have completed the registration form, you will receive an email with all the instructions.
