Objectives

All theses, no matter what the subject or discipline, contain similar sections which involve similar language. In this course, we will analyze the standard structure of a typical doctoral thesis and study the language used for different sections. We will provide input, activities and personalized guidance to help doctoral students make their theses read/sound more natural, fluent and correct.

We will also discuss other issues involved in the writing process: language research, drafting, editing and proofreading, style and “wordiness”.

Contents

- Introduction: stating the problem; explaining how you are going to deal with the problem; limiting your scope; outlining the structure of your thesis
- Background: presenting the relevant history and the context of your study; explaining current knowledge, theory and practice.
- Core: your hypothesis or research questions; explaining the methodology used to test your hypothesis; explaining why you chose the methodology; reporting the results
- Synthesis: discussing the implications of your research; drawing conclusions; checking your conclusions match the introduction
Methodology

Practical individual, pair work and group work activities of text analysis of samples from real doctoral theses; proofreading and editing activities; discussion of style; analysis of typical language and style errors.

Students will be required to do some writing as homework in order to practice the skills and language presented in class.

Evaluation

Students must attend 75% of the course to receive a passing grade. The final mark is based on continuous evaluation (50%) and completion of classroom assignments (50%)
